It was there that he had been deserted by a friend of a few hours who disappeared shortly after the accident. Gabbing and the friend, whom he met down town early in the evening, started through the yards towards the lake. In crossing the trestle Gabbing slipped through the beams and fell twenty feet to the ground, breaking a leg.

In hopes of attracting attention the suffering man shouted and shouted. Just before daybreak two men came along and stopped beside him.

"Get me a drink of water, please," he said.

"Oh, go on," was the reply. "There is not anything the matter with you." Then they passed him by.

At two o'clock in the afternoon a brakeman found him, and called the police patrol. Gabbing was taken to the Huron Road Hospital.

PUBLIC WORKS HIGH SCHOOLS

William Thum has a novel idea for drawing youth to the high schools. He holds that our high schools should be reconstructed so as to attract and accommodate all the population of proper age, instead of a small fragment as at present. To accomplish this they must be made semi-industrial concerns, where boys and girls may earn their living as they go on with their studies. This would lengthen the course several years, but would graduate the boy or girl in better shape to earn a competence thereafter. If a young man is getting a practical start in life, it does not matter much whether he graduates at 18 or 22. The city's work, particularly if the city embark in utilities, as is inevitable, will serve to keep most of these young people busy—that and such factories and other enterprises as may be established for the purpose. The writer works out the plan of a public works high school in detail, and it is not only sounds feasible, it is in many ways actually inspiring.

The book is a stimulating contribution to a question of great importance—what shall be the aim and concept of an educational system? This book, "A Forward Step," is published by the Twentieth Century Company, Boston.

CHILEAN CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

Santiago, Chile, Sept. 12.—The Chilean centennial celebration is now at its height. Throughout the length of the republic cities and towns are en fête for the occasion. The more elaborate exercises are being conducted in this city, the capital, and in Valparaiso, where warships representing the navies of the United States, Great Britain and other nations are assembled to take part in the festivities.

The occasion of the national rejoicing is the centennial anniversary of Chilean independence. Originally and for a long time Chile was under the dominion of the Incas of Peru, though it was not held without difficulty. Then it became a Spanish province and finally declared its independence of Spain in September, 1810, not actually winning it, however, until several years later.
